

What does it take for America to understand that citizens want more control over telephone solicitation rather than less. If I am already a customer of a bank or credit card company, I do not want them soliciting me for more business. How long does the fight for my telephone privacy have to go on? Is the message not clear yet?